The move would increase surveillance on the US population in direct violation of the US Constitution. The CIA, which has long demanded new legal powers to spy on the US population, has not been given permission by the US Congress to conduct mass surveillance. But the White House "gave in" to the agency's demand, according to anonymous sources who spoke with the Times. According to the Times, President Barack Obama has decided to "make the change" because he believes "the agency's ability to wiretap and spy on the Internet will play a role in the coming clash between the US and China over the US internet." The US intelligence community, and especially the NSA, has been under attack for years for its mass surveillance programs, which in the past revealed the contents of email messages and phone calls, and recorded the metadata of all phone calls in the US. Some of the leaked documents show the NSA has been engaged in a highly controversial and illegal program of spying on millions of Americans and has even targeted the heads of state
