Editing photos isn't the only function of Photoshop. Photoshop is also used for many creative and illustrative tasks, such as retouching, color correcting, and vector graphics. Blocking out Light and Dark When you get your little camera out, you have the opportunity to bring your photographs to life. You can create an art gallery full of your family's finest shots of past holidays, or you can take photos of your great-looking home and give your family a sneak preview of the great memories to come. Photoshop is a great tool for editing your family photos into something that's way more artistic. If you don't have a lot of professional experience with Photoshop, you can take the extra step of putting together the entire project in PhotoShop Elements instead. But you don't have to get all fancy: Even if you're just getting into the basics, making sure that your photos' shadows and highlights are well lit and well defined, and making sure that they're well exposed, is an important step in their development, and you can learn the technique for that step in this section. Unfortunately, placing highlights and shadows on your photos can be a complex task. Fortunately, Photoshop provides a quick and effective way to make the job easier. The way you can block out light and dark in Photoshop is a bit different than with other editing programs, but the basic concepts are the same. You first open your photo in Photoshop. Then you take the Layers window to the left of the workspace. (Check out the "Picking the Right Layers" section later in the chapter for more on the Layers window.) At the top left of the Layers window, click the Light box or the Shadow box, and you see a preview of your image with dark and light objects. As you drag your finger over the image preview, you find the image dotted with icons for the different areas where light and dark are painted. Some of the areas are painted as solid black or white, and others are shaded in between. As you drag the icon from a white or solid black area to the other areas, the transition begins to happen. Gauging the brightness of shadows and highlights Photoshop provides an ideal tool for measuring brightness. Click to select the Brightness and Contrast box in the Layers window, and you see a slider in the lower-left corner of the box that enables you to adjust brightness, contrast, and other aspects of your photo. Moving the slider enables

Aikatsu has taken the TV anime world by storm. Now, the idols are going mobile. Aikatsu Friends!, the long-in-the-works game project from Bandai Namco, is coming to the Nintendo Switch this Fall. Aikatsu Friends! follows the trappings of Bandai Namco's own Aikatsu Friends television anime, and, as you might have guessed, it's mostly about adventure. The game will feature around 30 returning characters, but also introduce new idol characters, new characters, and special collaboration characters. (Collaboration characters are characters that were featured in the Aikatsu Friends! TV anime, and have only been seen on TV, not in the game yet.) The game will feature 30 characters in total. The 20-player character/player ship battle system introduced in the anime returns, as does the 4-4 formation matches. The Battle Card system will also come back. It adds a lot of depth to the skirmishes. It's a card system that will allow one player to have a team of cards, with characters on them, and others to play them to battle. The new additions to the game include such things as functional chat systems, which allow you to discuss your battle cards. You can also have your own cards that you swap in with your team to combat others' teams. There are still many questions about Aikatsu Friends! that have yet to be answered. The IGN report states that Aikatsu Friends! will also include a "life-simulator mode" that, for some reason, has another game included alongside it called Not a particularly great name, but the function it has is that you can go through their life, do typical daily things. There's also a showcase mode where you can check out the characters and see how they perform. There's also a world map that can be accessed from in-game events, and the world map will showcase the performance of your characters. The game is coming to the Nintendo Switch this Fall. The game will include English subtitles. Junior Year Senior Semester It's been years since I've last been up here. Time seemed to stand still while I learned what you could do with a key and a pocket, stared at snakes at the trap house and drank from the Platte River. I remember seeing and touching the bones of ancient man. I also remember driving the road to Battle Creek, WV and reaching the tunnel in one piece. I remember Jeff coming back from Viet Nam and my first trip to Hawaii. Junior Day- May 4, 1969 I can still remember that day. For hours I'd been hearing about Junior Day and I was sure it would be the day I finally met you. While at the freshman fair, I'd heard about the great time you had at the senior basketball game and the thrill of running across the field and being met by you in our homecoming homecoming pajama party. A Most Helpful Girl I ever known- May 7, 1970 I remember my first Road Trip to DC. I remember the night we met up with you on the Colorado River. We went to the Lincoln Memorial and you told me about our new fraternity. We visited the Arlington National Cemetery and I told you about my problems with the Dean of Students. You said, "Jody, that's kind of a weird question". You told me about your grades, your plans for future and we all went to a club and danced. Your Confessions- September 29, 1974 I was getting into my stride, enjoying my new friendship with you. I was more relaxed in the way I'd learned you liked. But on the 25th of December you sent me this e-mail: "As you know, I like to get together with friends at this time of year. I have to admit that I've been missing a few people lately. How about next Friday night? I have to ask you this, though. If you'd like to, would you please not tell anyone that we're going to meet? I'm getting a bit paranoid lately and don't want anyone to know. I'd love to get out of the house this weekend." I didn't know what to say so I didn't reply. I don't think I was that upset about it. We were always each others best friends and had always kept things from each other. Then one day we went to the mall to buy a Christmas gift and something told me to make sure you read my
